

WTCA has Relocated

The new WTCA headquarters is housed in a 6,400 square-foot building.

WTCA moved to a new location on Madison, Wisconsin's west side in late March, with the help of Roger Gibbs, Steve Kennedy and Russ Benn from Lumber Specialties, Dyersville, Iowa.

The 6,400 square foot building is owned by Qualtim, WTCA's management company, so all of your dues dollars remain hard at work fulfilling WTCA's mission and meeting membership needs. WTCA offices will occupy 4,000 square foot.

We are excited that WTCA will have its own address, and hope that this will foster a stronger, more united industry. If any of you are in the Madison area, please stop by and visit us. We'd love to show you around.

We have also added two new staff people to assist in serving WTCA's needs. Linda Hammes started working with us in November. She will be assisting with Mike's current responsibilities in the publications area, as well as handling the organization of Truss Technician Training™ courses and other administrative activities.

Lora Gilardi started in December, and she will be helping with our membership activities, as well as accounting and administrative activities. She also has experience as a graphic artist/designer and has done Internet web site work, so we will be able to benefit from her talents in this area.

These additions will allow our current staff to focus more on WTCA's top priorities, i.e., chapter assistance and development, education, continuing to foster lumber industry participation, press re-lease and article writing, etc.

Thank you so much for your support and helping us continue to realize industry goals.
